

Josh Rosner

Joshua Rosner is a managing director at the independent research consulting firm Graham Fisher & Co., where he advises regulators and institutional investors on housing and mortgage finance issues. Previously, he was the managing director of financial services research for Medley Global Advisors, the premier provider of policy information on monetary, fiscal, regulatory, and political developments to many of the world's leading banks, mutual funds, hedge funds, and other institutional investors. Mr. Rosner was among the first analysts to identify operational and accounting problems in the government-sponsored enterprises (GSEs), the peak in the housing market, the likelihood of contagion in credit markets, and the weaknesses in the credit rating agencies' collateralized debt obligation (CDO) assumptions. His work on GSEs, credit rating agencies, and mortgage markets has resulted in invitations to present both privately and publicly before numerous organizations, businesses, policymakers, legislators, and regulators. Mr. Rosner has coauthored papers on the risks of CDOs to the mortgage finance market and the risk of misapplication of ratings in the structured finance market. Prior to joining Medley, Mr. Rosner was an executive vice president at CIBC World Markets and a senior vice president at its predecessor firm, Oppenheimer and Company.
