

Matt McFarland

Matt McFarland is Director of Credit Derivatives at Chicago Board Options Exchange (CBOE). In this role, Matt is working to establish a transparent, exchange-traded credit derivative product – an effort that has brought him in constant contact with industry organizations, regulators, and credit derivative market participants from both the buy-side and sell-side.

Prior to joining CBOE in 2007, Matt worked at JP Morgan (and its legacy banks) for 10 years, where he held various derivatives-related positions in equities and fixed income. His roles covered both listed and OTC products, with particular focus on exchange-traded derivatives.

Matt earned an MBA from DePaul University's Kellstadt Graduate School of Business in 2001. He completed his undergraduate studies at Marquette University in 1992.